hour's meeting that any substitute taxes for the disputed income levy must first be approved by the Senate GOP caucus before it is submitted to the House Republican

The committee, composed of eight Republican representatives and eight GOP senators, was set up last night to seek an agreement on a tax program that might be approved by both branches.

Speaker Herbert P. Sorg, of the House, issued this brief statement, at the end of the meeting: "At a meeting of the committee of the Senate Republican caucus with a committee of the House Republican caucus on fiscal problems of the commonwealth, it was decided that no alternative taxes would be submitted to the House Republican caucus for its approval until such time as a specific tax or taxes could be submitted to which the Senate Republican caucus subscribed.

"A joint meeting of the committees is planned as soon as the Senate caucus instructs their committee to that effect.'

A major job of the Senate contingent will be to convince the House delegates to backtrack on its support of Gov. John S. Fine's proposal for a one-half of one percent personal income tax.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR. New York, July 10 (AP)-A conservative Morning Journal, denying a yarn that there's a rift between Joe DiMaggio and Yankee Manager Casey Stengel, points out that Joe has become something of a "loner" lately. . . . He eats alone, seldom talks to his teammates or his manager and is inclined to return short, surly answers to reporters. . . We've heard the same thing elsewhere, and the scribes who used to be Joe's friends are now letting him alone.

You can't exactly blame a guy for feeling sour when he's on the downgrade after a great career. . . . And Joe, with a .261 batting average and frequent periods of enforced idleness, must realize he's near the end of the string. . . . DiMaggio is a guy who made a bad start and then learned to accept fame gracefully. You couldn't find a more pleasant companion than Joe when he was at his peak.

If he'd learn the same graceful acceptance of the end of his playing career he could go right on as one of the great personalities in sports.

. . Maybe it would be harder to come by $100,000 a year, but there

Republicans seeking to force Acheson's ouster witheld their fire until the bill financing his department reaches the House floor, probably early next week.

They did not offer in the committee a proposal to prohibit the use of any department funds to pay Acheson's salary during the fiscal year which started July 1. Such a ban probably will be ocered during House debate, and Democratic leaders conceded the vote will be close.

The committee recommended that the State Department be given $231,432,000 of the $283,686,476 President Truman requested. That stand were announced as Mrs. Genewould be a cut of $52,254,476.

This was a smaller percentage reduction than the committee applied to the 1952 budget of the Commerce Department, whose funds, along with those of the Justice Department and the judiciary, are carried in the same bill.
